Pop Up Tents: Economical Tents for Camping & Tenting

- If you want your tent set up quickly, then you'll certainly like the pop-up tent. As soon as you open the tent, it takes its shape and voila, you have a tent ready without any of the hard work. You can bring another camper with you and have decent space apiece in your pop-up tent.
- Intended Use: Family camping, car camping
- Benefits
- Even more so than ridge tents, a pop-up tent creates confidence in new campers since this tent sets up in moments. You only have to tie down the tent.
- Carrying and transporting this tent is no big deal since it's lightweight and thin.
- You get more room in a pop-up tent than you'd think looking at it from the outside.
- If you need to camp in a smaller area, a pop-up tent is an ideal pick.
- Downsides
- If you're doing backcountry camping or camping out in the deep wilderness, skip the pop-up tent. It can't handle the rigors of these types of camping.
- You don't have a lot of headroom in this tent.
- High winds can easily blow your pop-up tent away, so be careful!

Ridge Tents/Back Packing tents - Intended Use: Family Camping & Hiking

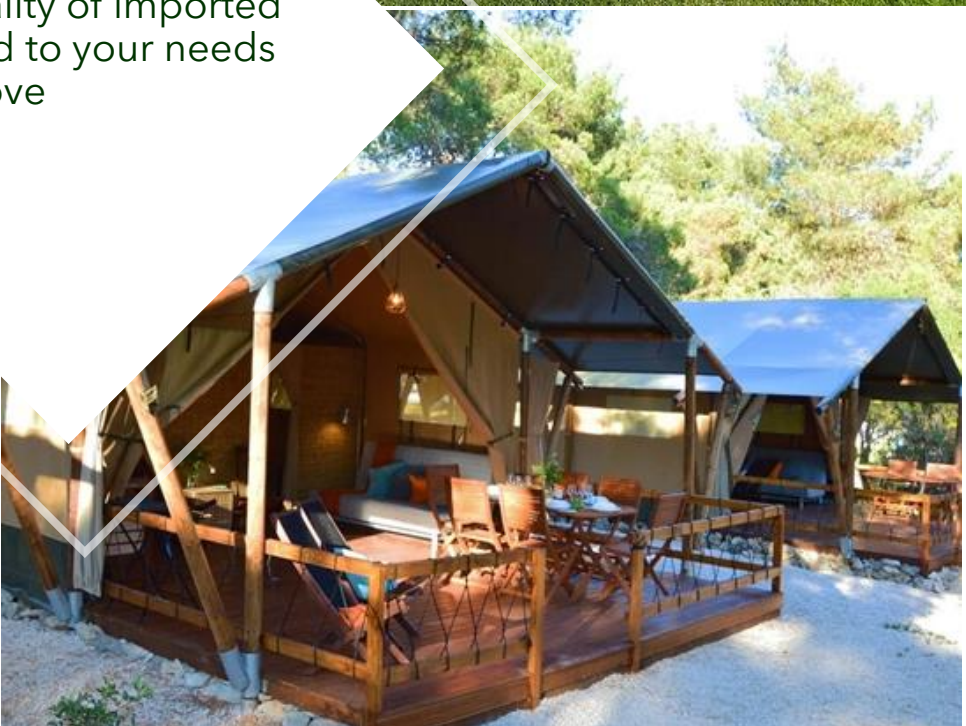

- The old classic known as the ridge tent was a preferred choice for decades. Even though it's less favorable these days, don't disqualify the ridge tent. It's still a very viable option.
- Despite its name, ridge tents are triangular in shape, and they come in all sorts of sizes. If you want a cozier camping experience with only you and a friend or partner, you can get a ridge tent for two. Some ridge tents can also accommodate three or four people or more.

- A lower and narrower tent, backpacking tents are made for durability and portability. Intended for backpackers and hikers looking to stay the night out in nature without carrying a big, heavy tent, backpacking tents can fit up to two people max. Normally used by resort guests who enjoy hiking during their stay
